A Message from Pastor Steven...

Dear Easter People,

Easter morning has come and gone. We have celebrated the gift of Christ's Resurrection. Our sanctuary was filled with lilies and Easter blooms in all their brightly colored glory. Our worship experience was lifted on the sounds of our organist and our choir. We sang with gusto, praising God for the wonderful gift of Easter, joining our voices as the Body of Christ. We heard the Word spoken, heralding the Good News of Jesus Christ and his defeat of sin and death. And, we heard the Word preached, challenging us to accept and live out the fullness of Easter's gifts. It was a good Easter, good worship, good celebration of Christ's power in our lives on Easter.

But now what? Where do we go from here? How do we bring the joy of Easter into our living now that the greatness of the Holy Day is over? As is often the case, attendance and participation fall back to ordinary numbers on the Sundays after Easter morning. Though the Easter season last for 50 days and the Easter call upon our lives continues year round for the rest of our lives, we still fall back to our regular routines and our busy schedules. The beauty of Easter morning too quickly becomes a mere memory. The Holy Day becomes just another holiday, celebrated but soon forgotten as we live into the next one on the calendar. When that happens we unknowingly lose out on the true wonder of the gift of Easter; we miss the opportunity to truly live as Easter People.

Peter Gomes, author and theologian, writes "...the resurrection is a continuing event which involves everyone who dares be involved in it. Easter is not just about Jesus, it's about you! Jesus has already claimed his new life. What about you? Easter is not just about the past, it's about the future. Your best days are ahead of you. The proof of the resurrection is in your hands and in your life." These wise words beg the question: Do we know the resurrection, the Easter gift, to be a continuing event, or is it only a holiday? The question is pointed, it may make us uncomfortable, but it is an important question. It is important because the Easter gift, the resurrection of the Body of Christ depends on our answer. If we are those who "dare" to be involved in the unending life of the resurrection story then we are those who strive to live and love as the Body of Christ, actively participating in the transformation of the world for the cause of Christ. We are those who know to the center of our souls that the gift of Easter, proof of the enormity of God's love, is too important to take a back seat to anything else. We are those who, for love of God and love of neighbor, commit ourselves to living as agents of God's love, setting our resurrection-life as the singular most important priority in our lives. As Gomes said, proof of the glory of the resurrection is in our hands and in our lives.

I pray we have each received God's gift of Easter in a profoundly life changing way, a way that has led us to dare to be Easter People every moment of every day. I pray we realize the awesome nature of God's gift in the resurrection of Christ and us with him. I pray we see the Risen Christ in one another, freeing the resurrection from being chained to the past or relegated to being a mere holiday. Friends, such faith is the resurrection, the very resurrection of you and me because Easter IS about our future and the future of everyone, everywhere.

Blessings in the Colors of Easter,

Pastor Steven

Keeping The Main Thing The Main Thing

By Rev. Dr. Tim Bias, Superintendent, Columbus Area South

There is a gospel hymn that says, "Like the woman at the well I was seeking for things that could not satisfy..."

Have you ever had an inward emptiness? I have. My life was filled with activity and busyness. Most all of it good, but I was not satisfied. Like empty calories that filled my stomach but failed to nourish my body; my heart, mind, and spirit were not being nourished by the good activity of my life.

It seems to me that, in our culture, there is no shortage of things, many of them good things, clamoring to take up residence in our hearts. If we open our hearts to them, we will be pushed and pulled by forces that quickly take control.

To live as children of God, and most specifically as Christ followers, our hearts need to be nourished with the presence of God. Against the attractions and anxieties that swirl about us, Jesus tells us to seek first the kingdom and righteousness of God (Matthew 6:33). This means to allow God to inform our lives through the witness of the scriptures, through Jesus Christ, and the witness of the saints through the ages. In this way, God becomes the center of everything.

Keeping The Main Thing The Main Thing

By Rev. Dr. Tim Bias, Superintendent, Columbus Area South

James W. Skillen writes, "The wisdom of Ecclesiastes teaches us that making ourselves the fixed point from which to view reality is a recipe for despair."¹

His words challenge us in the midst of a culture that is convinced that each individual is the source of what is right, wrong, and true. The result is often a do-it-yourself spirituality that tends to focus on personal fulfillment. How different from Jesus. Jesus assumes that the fixed point is God, who reveals wisdom to those who are as receptive as children rather than to those regarded as wise and learned (Matthew 11:25).

Our hearts will be filled with someone or something. That is why Jesus asks us to hunger and thirst for the righteousness of God. Doing so does not come naturally to us. In fact, it is natural for us to follow our own desires. So we begin always by inviting God to enter a heart that is instinctively non-receptive.

"It should not surprise us," writes Arthur Simon, "that prayer and time alone with God seem strange and out of place in a life that is occupied with many interests and responsibilities that make little allowance for anything so impractical. However, if the heart is to be properly filled, it must be emptied of things that leave no space for God, and give God access. Doing so means setting aside time for prayer and reflection. An empty prayer life reflects an emptiness in life, which is to say a cluttered and distracted heart."²

I hope you are allowing God access to your heart. It is my hope that you and I become so connected to God and to God's desire for us, that all the people around us become the focus of our care and hospitality. Those people may be our family, friends, neighbors or people experiencing grief or pain. It is my hope that those known or unknown to us, who may be hungry, homeless, imprisoned, victims of violence will be held close to God as we offer ourselves in risk-taking mission and service.

"If we genuinely love people," writes Richard Foster, "we desire for them far more than it is within our power to give, and that will cause us to pray."³

When our prayers are in order, everything else follows. When we pray, God helps us put our hearts and minds on things that matter. The action follows. Our hearts will be filled. I want my heart to be filled with a deep and abiding love for God and for you.

I pray that your heart will be filled with God's love as well.

How do you keep the main thing the main thing in your life?
